

Permaculture Collective Internship Program For Impoverished Communities Launched

Green Warrior Permaculture, a collective of sustainability specialists, has announced the launch of their Field Trainer Internship program. The internship prepares students to be permaculture trainers for sustainability aid work in impoverished communities and disaster zones.

More details can be found at <https://greenwarriorpermaculture.wordpress.com>

The course aims to provide field trainers with food security and sustainable development assistance in the field. Students will learn all aspects of project design and implementation in challenging situations.

Permaculture Aid helps people restore their own community by using local resources and growing their way out of poverty. While conventional aid creates aid-dependency, Permaculture Aid encourages self-sufficiency while restoring the Earth.

Students in the program develop skills to train people to rebuild their communities, achieve year-round food supplies, and restore their local economies with the help of proven strategies and techniques.

As part of the 10-week course, using real-life scenarios, trainees will have to teach the community members to be self-reliant by using locally available resources even during difficult circumstances. Additionally, during the course, the students must complete numerous small-scale projects in disaster areas or in poor communities.

Some of the tasks will be the construction of safe wells, waste management implementation, building nurseries, community forestry, and infrastructure. The interns will be trained by Steve Cran and Chakra Widia.

With the latest announcement, the program reinforces Green Warrior Permaculture's commitment to solving the problems of the world through action.

According to trainer and Permaculture Aid veteran Steve Cran, "These are the skills in the field you can't learn from books. Getting your hands in the soil and working in real-life situations drives home the training to create the kind of people that can make a real impact in the field of aid."

Interested parties can find more information by visiting the above-mentioned website.

Summary

Green Warrior Permaculture introduces a new Field Trainer internship program with projects conducted in real communities, solving real problems. Trainees graduate the course with hands-on field experience. This course is a must for people serious about a career in overseas development work.